Staying Agile, Delivering Value, Moving Forward Together

Dear Colleagues,

The banking industry continues to evolve at a rapid pace. Our clients are navigating growth ambitions, cost pressures, regulatory complexity, digital transformation, and the accelerating impact of AI—all at once. For us at Genpact, this makes staying close to our clients more important than ever. We need to understand where they are headed, what is keeping them up at night, and where we can make a real difference. Our goal should be simple: be a trusted advisor that clients can rely on, not just a partner they engage to deliver work.

We have strong banking capabilities across our team, and the opportunity ahead is to bring them together in ways that matter more to our clients. Whether it is solving a business problem, improving an existing process, providing better insights, or helping a client make a critical decision, we should always ask ourselves: what value are we creating? The quality of our work, the relevance of our thinking, and the way we show up for our clients will ultimately shape the strength of our relationships.

AI is also changing client conversations. GenAI and Agentic AI are rapidly moving from discussion to real business use cases, and our clients are looking to us for practical guidance on how to navigate this shift. We need to embrace these technologies ourselves and help our clients do the same, while staying grounded in business outcomes, domain expertise, governance, and sound judgment. The opportunity is not simply to use AI, but to rethink how we can work differently and deliver better outcomes because of it.

As we move forward, I would ask everyone to stay curious, stay close to our clients, and remain open to new ways of working. Being agile means being willing to adapt as our clients' needs change, while continuing to deliver with the quality and accountability they expect from us. If we keep that mindset and continue to work as one team, we can build stronger partnerships, deliver greater client value, and position ourselves well for what comes next.

Regards,
Jason
